Trust us, you'll really want this Aston Martin speedboat

BY GQ 30 APRIL 15

First things first, this speedboat doesn't technically exist. Which is just as well, otherwise we'd be too busy renegotiating our credit limit to tell you about it. What you're actually looking at is the AM37, a rendering created by Quintessence Yachts, Mulder Design and Aston Martin .

Quintessence collaborated with naval architects, Mulder Design, and Aston Martin to create a high-speed boat that will, some day, reach production. The 37 foot model will be available in two levels of trim. The AM37 S will be a sportyacht with a maximum speed of 60 knots (69mph), and the AM37 is what the company describes as "a gran turismo leisure boat with an even higher degree of luxury". But don't worry, it'll still hit 50 knots (57mph).

Just like the Aston Martin Vulcan, both the AM37 and AM37S use high-tech super-stiff composite materials like carbon fibre in their construction. But instead of adding rigidity to Nurburgring-shattering GT3 cars, Quintessence will use clever vacuum infusion technology to build a scalpel-sharp hull.

Shame you can't buy one. But at least there's time to apply for your Amex Centurion before the official debut at the Monaco Yacht Show this September.
