

Aston Martin Yacht On Its Way, Will Make DB9 Look Practically Attainable

2 days ago

5

ACCELERATE

6

What does every Aston Martin buyer really need next? That's right – an accompanying yacht.

John Bowman
@SprUnld

The British supercar marque has got into bed with the Dutch-based firms Quintessence Yachts and Mulder Design to give berth birth to the AM37 powerboat – so named because it will be 37ft long.

The idea – if you hadn't guessed – is to create a fast, elegant boat that has a sporty character and exclusive design, and there'll be two versions. The sportier model – the AM37 S – will be capable of up to

THE GRID

TODAY'S TOP STORIES,
ACCELERATED BY YOU

1

18

Rally Driver And Co-Driver Have
Lucky Escape From Dramatic Crash

2

12

How To Spot An 'Invisible'
Unmarked Police Bike

3

7

Unhinged Woman Sets Man's Car
On Fire When He Refuses Her A Cigarette

4

6

Another LaFerrari Meets Its Maker
After Chinese Crash

5

5

Clarkson, Hammond And May
Having Not-So-Secret Meeting At Goodwood

6

5

These Car Crash Close Shaves Are Guaranteed To Make You Wince

7

NEWS FEATURES US

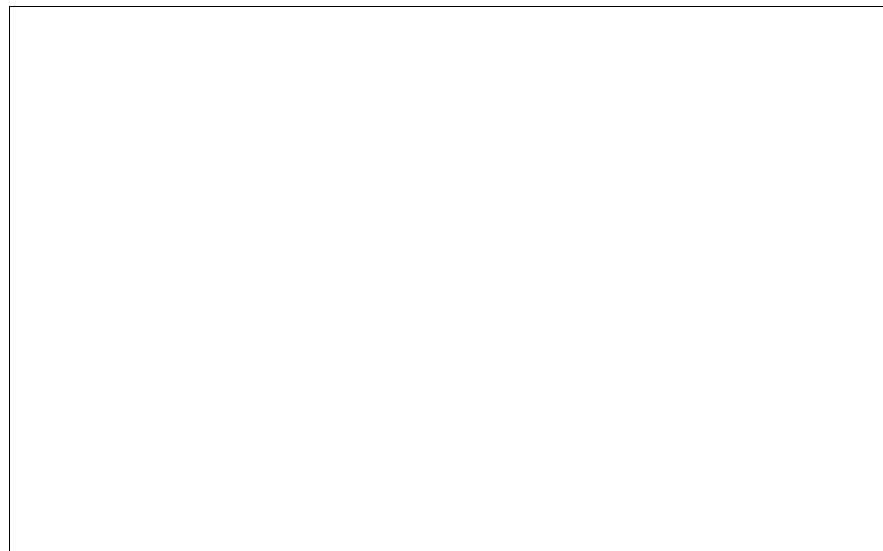

about 44 knots (50.6mph), says Quintessence.

We've only got digital images at the moment to tantalise us and there's not even a whisper of the price, but we understand there will be a full unveiling at the Monaco Yacht Show in September, with construction taking place in the UK – possibly not too far from SuperUnleaded Towers.

Likely customers are apparently being given fuller details on a private and hush-hush basis.

Guess we'll just have to content ourselves for now with this stirring promotional video. It's got crashing waves and lava (lava?) and EVERYTHING!

Images: Quintessence Yachts/Aston Martin

5

ACCELERATE

6